Similar accidents have occurred on previous occasions, as for instance, in the case of the British barque Homer, which was totally wrecked there during last winter, and the steamer Swatow, which, under exactly similar circumstances, was indebted to a mere accident for preservation from destruction. As soon as the Ratchorse went ashore, the masts were cut away and every attempt made to lighten her and got her off. These efforts were, however, unsuccessful, as a gale which had been threatening for some time before set in with terrific violence and prevented the men from either working at the ship or launching the boats. Nothing remained then for the crew to do but to fasten themselves down as best they could. Enormous seas continued to aweep over the deck so that next morning, out of a total strength of one hundred and eight officers and men, only nine survivors were found, the rest having perished of cold and exhaustion or having having been swept off the decks.
